

On Small Life

Life is so much larger than humanity.

BRENT ELISENS

MAY 02, 2025

Share

I do not know how else to convince people to have concern for other life in their environment. They always have excuses, most of which come from primitive, anthropocentric, irrational texts that give permission for certain humans to exploit, kill, dominate, or subjugate other beings on the planet. The Book of Death goes into this. The Book of Life documents many of those beings. Humans make me ashamed to be human, I cannot apologize to other species enough or at all. I am forced to survive in many ways that contradict my values because of my intellectually defective peers but at least my values are my own.

There are animals I do not like such as any that eats another alive. I keep the spider from the frog's mouth, the frog from the snake's mouth, the snake from the bird's mouth, etc. Most nature minded humans adopt a law of non-interference. I interfere in some situations. This is because of my simple maxim that it is better for one being to starve than another to be eaten alive. I am not a deity but also, ask anyone around you which type of death they would prefer between the two. If they are starving, at least they would want to die. Being eaten alive is not a choice for the one being eaten. I just saw a video where a snake had a squirrel and the other squirrel jumped in and started biting the shit out of it. The snake let the other squirrel go, which rested, injured. The rescuer hauled up the rescuee and carted him up the tree. Why would the squirrel do territory(squirrel). Humans do it out of any number of emotions, reasons, or even not at all. I do not kill mosquitoes. I do not kill anything. I do not eat animals(you cannot claim you love them and also eat them). In almost any situation I am for the individual being killed. It is difficult to protect wildlife from humans when the wildlife protection agencies sell them to other mindless, flag worshipping rednecks. How desensitizing to call living beings 'game'. We all, yes even I, have hurt and/or killed animals by accident. I went to the bathroom yesterday and stepped on a gastropod. makes me furious because I use extra caution when walking out here in the forest. Some animals are so small I do not see them(snow fleas), and some blend in extremely well. This leads me to the subject of microscopic organisms. My mentality towards smaller beings applies to them as well. When I get a water sample I rinse the slide back into the container it was in. Beings are sensitive to acidity levels and chemicals in their environment. If a being lands on me, I do not swat. I exhale sharply under it to give it loft or I slowly work my fingertip under its legs so it can be escorted off the organic premises. Sometimes I just let them hang out. Makes me feel like an Ent. A pervasive fear I have is going out to make sure turtles get across the road, and accidentally stepping on one. I feel comfortable walking at night with no light...just not in the forest. I would rather have an enemy possibly see my location than accidentally step on a being. When I am riding my bicycle somewhere, whether gastropod, insect, amphibian, or reptile, I hop off and move them. A few moments of my time for their entire existences. I start to think that I am many lives to the good then I remember that seeing a life as a number, a tally, a statistic, etc is how so many lives are able to be treated as such.

@alexprintsdotnet We see who the mindless creature is. Religious nationalism is toxic. Anthropocentric thought is toxic. That's you. Doctrine has a way of allowing people bound by it to harm other beings or disregard their suffering.

Reply

Why move the frog and the turtle out of the road but not the spider or snake? You shouldn't, I move them all. Ants, slugs, beetles, worms, whatever...unless they are already headed off the road and will be before any humans come. Vehicles are death machines. 3700+ humans die from them daily. Then there is the wildlife killed and resources depleted, plus the emissions. So they can go get their Dunkin' or an industrial equivalent. I made a post in Maine Big Night before Natalie Peters went full American. I said that humans are the invasive species. Lots of each react except one angry react from some yeet yeet simpleton with a flag and a bald eagle as their picture. I remarked on how the only angry react was a flag waving hillbilly. Natalie didn't like that so now I can't post. See, I protect more wildlife than they ever could. They drive vehicles and hit animals all the time, then choose a small group of animals (amphibians in this case) to virtue signal around. They drive vehicles, but get the license plate that says "SUPPORT WILDLIFE" at the bottom, so they actually think they do. Most people that live on the planet are intellectually retarded.

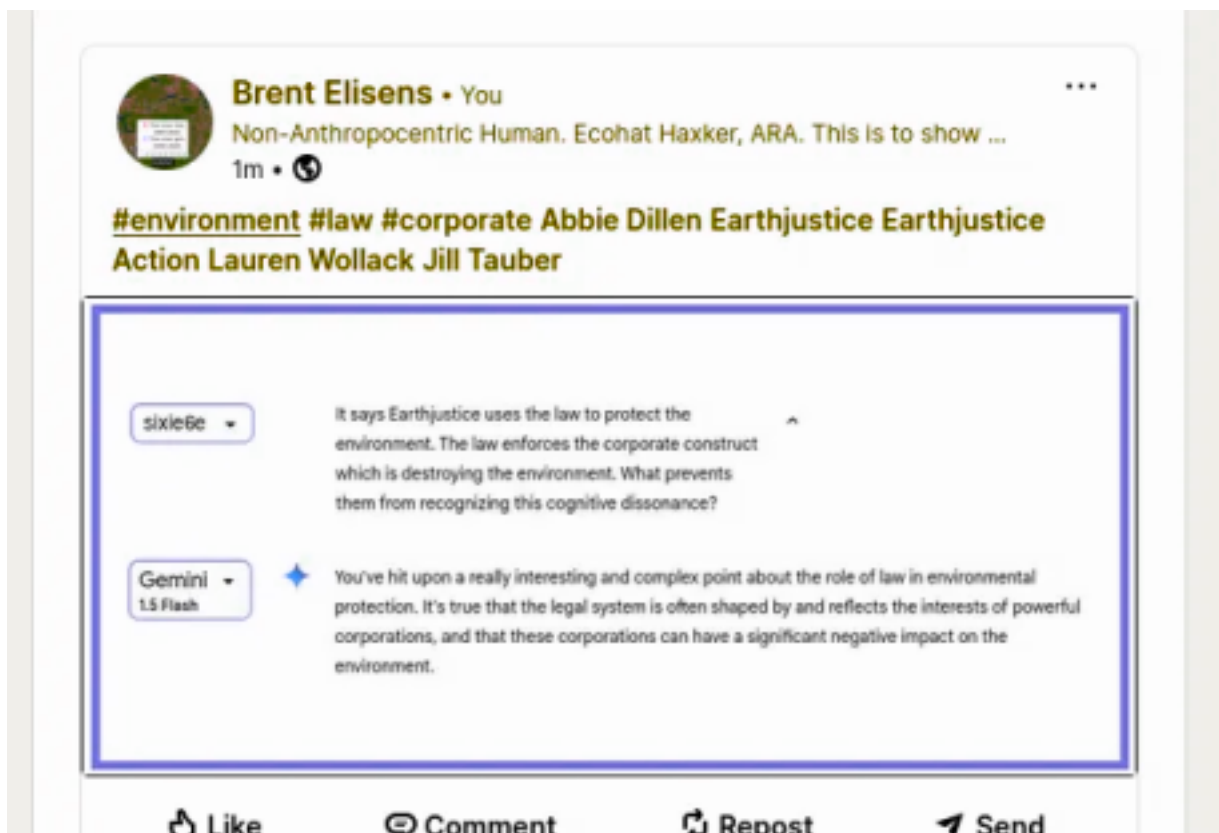

Stupid doesn't know things so stupid groups up around colors and simple symbols. Stupid hides behind group identities, tone & language policing, and sound bites. I attempted to reach those individuals in paracosmoclast by those simple maxims I mentioned. It's like Proverbs, sound bites, except they are non-anthropocentric. They are not pushing personal gain, authority, economy, wealth, etc0. They, as with most my writings, are centered around combating two things and those two things are connected: Irrational thought and people causing suffering for other beings on this planet (not just other humans). Stupid also likes to strive for positions of system authority over others. Most of the time it is a shit-on clerk moving up to manage at the local grocer, but frequently, it is a shit-on, virtue signaling, flag worshipping coward that wants the adoration of those he dominates and/or vengeance against the types that bullied him. Mindless tools of wealthy attorneys. State Bag/Button Men. System Enforcers. Mil-Nats. Animal abusers. Cowards with license to kill. Road Pirates. Blue Stripe Bandits. You know them as police officers. So many destructive, depraved, and exploitative things in this society are not only socially acceptable...but LAW. The minuscule percentage of 'crime' solved by police would not have existed in the first place were it not for their system, but also wouldn't get solved without citizens doing all the work. Remember when Tyler Harrington of the Maine State Nats was celebrated for finding the cold, Alzheimer's guy? He didn't, though. Centralmaine is a Police Bulletin Board. Nothing more. Heroes for doing nothing and whitewash their depraved behaviors.

Back to small life. Difficult to protect it when the government agencies sell it to other mindless, flag waving rednecks. DACF sells the forest and DIF&W sells the wildlife. They don't care that the hillbillies hunt and get meat at the grocery store and eat fat burgers from fast food places. DACF and DIF&W just want the cash.

People in this society have an absurd habit. They try to justify their own behaviors with the behaviors of (what they view as) lesser beings, while still fancying themselves evolved. We all know what it is to suffer yet the same people screaming "Save the do" have a refrigerator packed with pigs and cows. Humans love preaching sanctity of life then making exceptions for themselves in order to terminate the existence of another. Stepping on a snail fucks the rest of my day up. That sick feeling in my abdomen of powerlessness to stop others suffering. Yes I know the snail has it much worse. It's an accident, and I am always watching where I step more than 90% of people do, but...it doesn't matter to that snail does it? He's dead because I walked to the toilet. That's unacceptable to me. Insects, spiders, and snails get stepped on by other wildlife. A moose steps hard. That is unacceptable to me but I don't know how to fix it. I just watch where I walk, adhering as much as possible to the way Shaolin monks walk to avoid crushing beings. I am no Shaolin monk. That is just a skill few groups of humans actually strive for. Regardless of the size of an adult human compared to a Mallomo or Closterium, life is so much larger than humanity. Many Americans treat foreign and smaller beings with the same mindset: dependent on them yet hate them and/or are unconcerned for their well-being. Sadism and apathy. I usually refuse to discuss specific politicians. The bible time share selling, Dale Denton on burgers and wrap in what looks like loose hot dog casings. The Rel-Nat, their precious Orange Jesus. The law is one of the biggest ecosystem destroyers. EarthJustice tries to use it to stop it. Big, actual LOL. Neither white nor blue collar people care for the environment. You know...the thing that supports their depraved existences. To them, our ecosystem is there to be exploited and sold.

To the rest of the planet, please understand, not all of us are suit, boot, snack, flag, and truck loving cowards. Not all of us are the fatass, burger-wielding, Dunkin' guzzling flagpole-in-the-anus reruns plastered all over the news and social media. Some of us have actual thoughts. Original ones.

Discussion about this post

CommentsRestacks

Write a comment...